Bibliographies in the Quick Bibliography Series of the National Agricultural Library, are intended primarily for current awareness, and as the title of the series implies, are not indepth exhaustive bibliographies on any given subject. However, the citations are a substantial resource for recent investigations on a given topic. They also serve the purpose of bringing the literature of agriculture to the interested user who, in many cases, could not access it by any other means. The bibliographies are derived from computerized on-line searches of the AGRICOLA data base. Timeliness of topic and evidence of extensive interest are the selection criteria.

The author/searcher determines the purpose, length, and search strategy of the Quick Bibliography. Information regarding these is available upon request from the author/searcher.

Copies of this bibliography may be made or used for distribution without prior approval. The inclusion or omission of a particular publication or citation may not be construed as endorsement or disapproval.

To request a copy of a bibliography in this series, send the title, series number and self-addressed gummed label to:

Extract: The role of black residents in rural community affairs has recently undergone important changes. Increased black voter participation, return migration, and changing social attitudes have all contributed to a growing number of blacks being elected and appointed to leadership positions. Although research has demonstrated the uneven consequences of industrial growth for rural communities, industrial development remains a primary interest for many decision-makers. The study examines rural community leader perceptions of the industrialization process based on a set of industry characteristics and community impacts. Focusing on black and white community leaders in eight nonmetropolitan Deep South counties, we use multivariate techniques to examine differences between black and white leaders on selected dimensions of industrialization and assess their cumulative ability to differentiate the two groups.

Extract: Government capacity consists of three major components. First, institutions at all levels, central, local, public, and private, must have sufficient authority to undertake their assigned roles. Second, adequate financing is necessary to implement government responsibilities. Third, good leadership is needed to assure that authority and resources are used wisely. Governments seeking to decentralize must consider many fundamental issues regarding allocations of authority and finances, the strength of local leadership, and the structuring of central institutions.
